BUSINESS ANSWERS TO PRESSING B2B MATTERS

FAMILY LAW

Focusing on the Best Interests of Your Child

At The Harris Law Firm, we recognize that many divorcing parents experience considerable confusion regarding the process of determining the allocation of parental responsibility. Our family law attorneys seek to provide our clients with answers to bring them the peace of mind they need during this challenging time.

Some of the questions we hear most often include:

What factors do the courts take into account when deciding on parenting time?

The court will consider factors that include the age, sex and health of the children and the parents. They will also review the parent's lifestyles and their ability to provide a healthy and stable environment for the children involved.

Will the courts award parenting time to both parents?

It is fairly common for Colorado courts to award parenting time to both parents. Joint parenting time allows both parents to share the responsibility and decision-making associated with the allocation of parental rights.

What if my job demands that I relocate to another state?

Relocation is a serious legal issue when it involves the modification of a court ordered parenting plan. The details of this kind of issue should be addressed with a family law attorney.
